

An Elegie to the Lady Bedford 22
You that one shee, & young noble shee in her dead face, halfe of yo^r selfe shall see shee was that other part, for so they doe wth builde their friendship, become one of two so two y^t but themselves, no third can fitt (wth were to be so when they were not yett) Twyns through their birth cause & mistake as duers starres one constellation make paire like two eyes, have equall motion for both but one meanes to see, one way to goe had you dyde first, a carcase shee had ben & in your rich tomb, in her face had seen shee like the soule is gon, & yo^r here stays not a liue freed, but the other half of claye And since you act the part, as men say here has such a prince, when but one pt is there & do all honor, & devotion due: unto the whole, so were all reverence you, for such a friendship who would not adore: in yo^r, whoe are all, whoe both were before. not all as if some wish'd by this: but so y^t in yo^r all contracted is as if this all, though many pts decay: y^t part wth elemented them shall stay.
& though diffus'd & spread in infinite shall recollect & in one all unite So madams

So Madam as her Soule to heave is fled her flesh rests in the earth as in a bed her virtues do as in her proper sphere returne to dwell wth yo^u of whom they were as perfect motions are all circular.
So they to yo^u their sea where head streams she was all spices, yo^u all metals, so in yo^u two, were did both rich Indies know And as no fyre nor rust can spend or waste one dram of golde but w^h was first shall last though yt be forced in water, earth, salt aire, expanded in infynity, none will impair so to you^r self yo^u may additions take but nothing yo^u self or changed make seeke not in seeking new, to seeme to doubt if you can match her, or not be without but lett some faithfull booke in her room be yet but of Judith, no such booke as shee

Earle of Pembroke

If her disloyalty least change in yo^u can move you do not love for while the hopes give fuel to y^e fire you fill desire.

Love is not lone, but given free & so is mine; so should yours bee
