A Capusins Life

Pride, Vameglorie, hope, and feare
Playe their Maye games everie yeare
And what youth layes out in lust
Is return'd with shame and dust
Blest she skill from all beginning
Which shewes Ignorance in sinning

Some count Time by ioye, or care
But wee reckon it by Prayer
And more certaine watch cann tell
Then village Coche, or Curfewe Bell
The time of which wee take most keepe
Is the howre of our last sleepe

Obedience from the Elephant
Wee borrowe, and voluntarie want
From that which sowes, nor reapes, the Sparrowe yett hath plentie for the morrowe
Chastitie from the Turtle Dove
Emblem of Eternall loue
And of these three Jewells & wine
A vowe which Heaven, and Earth combine

Finis

Come live with mee and bee my Loue
And wee will some swete pleasures proue
In gilded sands, and silver Brookes
With silber Limes, and silver hoo kes

There will the River murmuring run,
Warm'd by thine eie, more then the Sunne
And there th'ammour'd fishe will plaie
Begging themselves they may betraye.

If thou wilt swimme in that cleare Bath
Each fishe, that every channell hath
Will amorously to thee swimme
Gladder to catch thee then thou him

Nor to bee seene sweete bee thou loth
By Sunn, or Moone, thou darkest both,
And if my selfe have leaue to seee
I neede not their light, having thee.

Let others freeze with angling reedes
And hurt their leggs with shells and weedes
Or treacherously poore fishe besett
With strangling snares, or winding netts

Let courses bold, handes from slimy nest
The Bedd'd fishe, from banks out wrest
With curious Traitors, sleath silke flies
Bewitch poore fishes wandring eies.

For thee; thou needst noe such deceite,
Thou to thy selfe art thine owne baites
That fishe, which is not caught thereby,
Alas is wiser farre then I.
